

Delivering a Fresh Approach to your Food Logistics

WTA Food

With the UK's food and drink exports exceeding £23.6 billion, the food export opportunities around the globe are endless.

Deciding on an export market and how to sell abroad are difficult steps to navigate, but there is so much support from the UK government and associations such as the Food and Drink Exporting Association (FDEA). Once you have your exporting strategy set up, the next vital step in your journey is getting your product to market on time in a cost effective manner, as well as developing a logistical process that fits your current and future needs.

Your logistical supply chain can potentially be one of the most costly elements of your overall export journey if not handled correctly. You need to find a logistics partner who listens to your requirements and maps out a supply chain process that is fit for purpose and will avoid any unintended costs.

The Five Key Steps to consider in the exporting process

- 1. What mode of transport do you want to use? Each mode has different cost implications.
- 2. Establish what Incoterm is the correct fit for your business
- 3. Understand the areas of customs and compliance when it comes to exporting food.
- 4. Do you need warehousing?
- 5. How critical are on-time deliveries for your food products?

Your supply chain is so much more than just moving goods from A to B. It's about understanding the journey is as important as the end. Therefore, at WTA Food, we work diligently to identify any cost saving opportunities and liaise with all necessary parties on your behalf to find the fastest path to transporting your goods.
